Other Comments on the Thesis

The author worked tirelessly to complete the bachelor thesis. As a result, the thesis's goal was met, which was indicative of the knowledge application and analysis accomplished. The author offered an explanation of what insurance is and the many types of insurance; however, this subject was sadly not completely addressed. The country-specific review filled up the theoretical background's shortcomings. A comparative study of Japan and Cambodia was undertaken for four primary factors, which were appropriately explained alongside the author's suggested reasons for the comparative analysis. The author used the consultation hours very well and was dedicated to her work. I can only suggest that the depth of the study could be broadened and argued competently with literary sources.

In your own estimation, what constitute as the 'best practice' of Japan's insurance market for which Cambodia should benchmark?

Given the potential of the Cambodian insurance market, do you see future structural changes which could help improve the insurance market aside the analysed reasons?
